Soon great crowds of men and women came to view the bodies, with a view to identifying them. When the morning had advanced, and the streets began to be filled with people going to work, hundreds of them stopped and went into the station to see the bodies.

As the droves of people went in and cut, they attered cries and moans, and they got so noisy that after awhile the prisoners jeered at their agony. There were little children who came, too, who looked at the scene of death and cried, but could not understand it at all.

On the outside the station the scenes were repeated. Hundreds of people who could not get in because the police let in only a few dozen at a time, blocked up the street, talked and laughed while they waited their turn. Many of them came only through curiosity, having no idea that they knew the dead people. At last Morris Weinburg went to the station. He is a tailor who lives at $5 Columbia street, and works in the Schackman shop. He knew the dead. The man was a watchman for Schackman, and the two youths were his sons. They always slept in the shop, and so far as be knew had no other home.

The event, while something of a social feature in theatrical circles, would have attracted but passing notice, but for the sudden and unexpected change it made in Miss Malcolm's ideas of what was the proper thing in the way of tights and anatomical exhibitions on the stage. She seemed to experience a sudden attack of modesty, When she appeared last Thursday evening, down stage, prompt side, for her first entrance as the gay Prince of the piece, clad in knee-long skirts, instead of white slik tights, the manager kicked.

Miss Malcolm, or Mrs. Schiek, said she didn't think it at all nice to go before all "those people" showing her legs up to a pair of abbreviated trunks. She was a married woman, and such exhibitions would in the future be reserved for her husband.

The manager insisted that the part called for tights, and it must be tights or Miss Malcolm would be cut out of the play. The actress finally gave in, and continues nightly to show as much of herself as formerly.

GLASS SKULL FOR POISONS.

Unique Bottle Ivented by a Boston Man.

The unlabelled poison bottle is as badd as the unloaded gun for causing fatalities. Carelessenress at home will render useless the utmost vigilance of the drug clerk who relies upon the warning label required by law to be pasted on all poisonous prescriptions. To obviate this danger a man living in the suburb of Hoston known as Jamisca Plains has made a bottle which very effectually corveys the necessary information as to the deadly nature of its contents, so that not only he who runs may read but he who cannot read may understand.

The bottle is of blue glass, in order that the contents may better resist being affected by light, and it is moulded into the shape of a skull, with cross-bones undermenth. The word "poison" is placed in raised letters on the forehead, and at the base of the skull a space has been left for the red label that tells the nature of the drug. The hollow eyesookets, the jawbones and the teeth would tell its purpose to a blind man, and ghastly as it may seem to those who are blessed with sight, it is better to be frightened than to die. That at least is not a druggist or doctor, by the way, but a plain, every-day jobber in boots and shoes.
